Q1.

TCP client is what looks for a connection to the server while the server implementation is what is listening for calls / connections to come in using listening socket.

Q2.

The TCP checks if there is a connection with the client and checks this before the client sends data and the sever sends data as well. The UDP is the opposite and will sent and receive data regardless.